Abstract:

Grammatically, the word 'Research' falls under two parts of speeches i.e. noun & verb. Under noun it means- to investigate, inquiry, study, analysis, probe, review, examination, exploration, inspection, scrutiny, assessment, testing, fact-finding, experiments, experimentation, groundwork, documentation; and under verb it implies to investigate<sup>1</sup>, enquire into, look into, inspect, probe, search, assess, review, study, analyse, examine, explore, scrutinize, test, experiment with.<sup>2</sup>

Though the technicality of research process puzzles many and at times seems to be extremely difficult, but in practice we all do it with some varying degree. Some such instances may be- selecting a right dress, exercising voting right, admitting a child to a school and so on. Even where an individual, actively or passively, chooses not to participate in the research and decision-making process, the research carried out by others and outcomes thereto have an impact upon him. Policies, laws, projects etc. are the result of intense research. The present research article intends to study various facets of legal research and its impact on society in general and individual at particular.

Introduction:

The term 'Research' can be understood with orientation to the purpose it seeks to accomplish. The purpose of research is generally categorised into three categories- the generation of new knowledge; to enhance the existing knowledge or to resolve the ascended issue of socio-political relevance. The former can be called as disinterested search aiming to acquire new knowledge or better understanding and comprehension of the subject. The latter is more practical based approach aiming towards problem solving and dealing with the issues of present and future. The prefix 're' used in the word research connotes a range of activities which checks or enhances existing information. It includes an orderly, cautious, tenacious and careful examination concerning a particular inquiry with an essential object of adding to the current information. An aimless, vague, unsystematic and simple surface brushing would give us results that can't uncover practical results.

Aim of Research:

Besides from general comprehension, of realizing that is, unadulterated, essential, pure and fundamental investigation or to discover something new as in type of an answer that is applied or action research, placing in more extensive terms an exploration satisfies at least one of the accompanying goals:
