Summary:

Teaching in legal education means teaching in law schools and colleges. The syllabus in law schools/colleges is prescribed by the Bar Council of India. There is some what scope to the colleges or universities to make changes suitable for local laws. Various teaching methods are presently used in the law colleges. Which include classroom teaching, case study etc. If we consider conventional method in law colleges are classroom teaching or lecture method. But due to new technological advancement, and particularly after Corona pandemic situation, there is a lot of change in the teaching field. Now more emphasis is given to technology and flipped class. The present paper considers such changes due to present new situation in the society.

Key word: Teaching, legal education, teaching pedagogy.

Introduction:

Teaching in law school or teaching legal education is somewhat different than teaching in other conventional educational institution. Law schools or institutions are considered as professional education. In a professional education, there is such syllabus and programme which improve knowledge, skills, behavior which is to be used by the student in his future professional life. Such knowledge and skills are very useful which improve students ability to perform in better way. Therefore professional schools, law schools should adopt such pedagogy which will enhance the ability of law students.

There are various method or pedagogy for legal education which is to be used in classroom, outside the classroom. It included classroom teaching, visits, assignment, practical training, etc. A lawyer during his legal practice come into contact with police system, judicial system, prison, and the client (society). Therefore the legal education ought to be such that, a law student should know about such systems.

Classroom teaching:

In the conventional teaching method, classroom teaching is most common, important teaching method. Even in the current time of digital technology, classroom teaching is having its importance. For teaching in the classroom, lecture method, case law method, group discussion, can be used. In classroom teaching teacher can get immediate feedback from the students. Teachers can have eye contact with students which help both teacher and students for better communication.

ICT enabled classroom:

Though conventional type of classroom is never losing its importance; ICT enabled classroom is getting more attraction from the learners. Conventional type of classroom where a teacher come and delivers after delivering his lecture is now old fashion. ICT
